ABSTRACT

The purpose of this research is to investigate bullying and its effects on children in public primary schools in Kihara Division. The objective of the study is to find out the effects of bullying on children and to identify the role played by parents and teachers in regard to bullying. The researcher proposes to use a descriptive survey design of research whereby data collection instruments will include questionnaires and documentary guides.

The researcher will use random sampling to select the target group. Data collection will be analyzed and presented quantitatively by use of bar graphs, frequency tables and pie charts. Despite the governmental initiative of subsidizing education in public primary schools with the aim of making sure that pupils remain in class, academic performance in Kihara Division still remains low and therefore there is a need to carry out this investigation to establish the effects of bullying on academic failure.
