ABSTRACT

The quest to curb the road carnage has increasingly become of a national importance due to the large numbers of lives that are lost due to road accidents. It has caused enormous negative social and economic impact to the Kenya economy. This study examines how we can try to reduce the accident rates in Kenya and curb this menace. In addition it offers suggestions on how to improve our legislation on traffic laws. It further concludes that by curbing the increasing road accident is a factor in realizing a double digit growth economy in Kenya.
