ABSTRACT

There are many methods used by teachers to teach English and Literature in secondary schools in Kenya. This study however focuses on the schools of Kiambu county, Githunguri zone whose performance in the language has continued to drop worryingly, year by year. The study seeks to find out how popular group work is and how effective it would be if and when fully incorporated in the learning process. The researcher seeks to find out how group work compares to other learning methods, the reasons and thereafter come up with recommendations that will strike a balance and level the board and thereby boost the performance of English language in Kiambu county, Githunguri zone.
