ABSTRACT

This is a study about factors that contribute to child labour and its effects on the learners who are affected by this unfortunate situation. During the research, the researcher employed a quantitative approach and a survey design. Out of 120 primary schools in the new Tana North district, the researcher has selected 20 schools using random sample. To carry out the research successfully, the researcher selected two teachers from each sampled school. After collecting the data and eventually analyzing it. The researcher will draw a conclusion by generalization. It is expected that the research findings will depict the problem which learners face and which the government through the Ministry of Education and the community are yet to address in their attempt to assist the vulnerable children. The recommendations of the research will go a long way to create awareness to the various stakeholders in education sector e.g. non-governmental organizations and the community on their roles in supporting the needy children in the society. The step that each stakeholder in the education sector will take to alleviate child labour and with time eradicate it completely in future.
