ABSTRACT

School violence is an increasing ideology a factor that has degraded our education systems and capacity for a while. Discipline regulatory statutes which discourage punishment in school are been blamed for this development hence questioning the role of the parents mainly because they were supposed to intervene and resolve this social subjects as a way of enhancing conducive learning environment. Before this development was put in place, schools violence ware not as popular as it is and if they were there, there was a mechanism of dealing with them. The fact that the whole duty of discipline is subjected to the parent, the increase of violence and poor performance can be squarely blamed on parents hence questioning their role in school violence.
